SECTION A

Q1 Read the passage carefully and answer the questions given below:

All these things, of which other women of her class would not even have been aware, tormented and insulted her. The sight of the little Breton girl who came to do the work in her little house aroused heart-broken regrets and hopeless dreams in her mind. She imagined silent antechambers, heavy with Oriental tapestries, lit by torches in lofty bronze sockets, with two tall footmen in knee-breeches sleeping in large arm-chairs, overcome by the heavy warmth of the stove. She imagined vast saloons hung with antique silks, exquisite pieces of furniture supporting priceless ornaments, and small, charming, perfumed rooms, created just for little parties of intimate friends, men who were famous and sought after, whose homage roused every other woman's envious longings.

Q11. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow:

More change has occurred in the environmental movement during the past ten years than in its entire previous history. Its thrust has become less ideological and more pragmatic, less New Age and more scientific. It is increasingly grounded in the databases of atmospheric science and the genetic models of conservation biology.

The practice of conservation in particular is now linked to economic development rather than opposed to it, focused on biological diversity rather than just scenic beauty, broadened to save entire ecosystems rather than individual star species such as pandas and bald eagles, and tilted to put increasing emphasis on those tropical countries where the most severe environmental problems exist.

The next hundred years may well evolve into the century of the environment-during which most societies shift from guns and bullets to butter and trees. All this comes not a moment too soon, if we are to save a failing planet.

A decade ago the public image of environmentalism was burdened with what might be called the Greenpeace metaphor. Environmental issues were caricatured as theatres of ideological conflict, where champions of Nature battled champions of Progress. Liberals, in this view, blocked dams in order to save oddly named small fishes, while conservatives heedlessly sacrificed the environment for short-term profit. The dichotomy was far from exact, but like most oversimplifications it held a lot of truth and reflected accurately some of the larger tensions of American life.

Today, to my distress, some conservative writers continue to treat environmentalism with skepticism or outright hostility. They depict it as one more workshop of the left, a means of enlarging government control and the power of the bureaucratic New Class, and a cudgel with which to beat free market economies and press for a restructuring of society – in short, a clever scheme to add the environment and its votaries to the Welfare State.

This is a mistake.

The environmental crisis is real. If the heart of the conservation agenda is the preservation of the best in the world in the midst of change, it cannot be limited to institutions, the rule of law, and personal morality, but must also embrace the environment. 'Conservare' is the common stem of conservation and conservatism, and perhaps that ancient link should serve as a signature of the basic principle that humanity does not exist apart from nature and will suffer to the extent that we abuse it.

Growth in scientific knowledge has altered the character of the environmental movement and its relation to political and economic life. A global view now prevails. We no longer see changes as isolated episodes-the pollution of a river here or the extinction of a bird species there. Now we see all of these events as having coalesced into worldwide secular trends.

Q.12 Read the poem and answer the questions that follow:

The Song of an Unborn Girl

Is I'm an angel in disguise with dimpled cheeks and laughing eyes
Don't you want me? I am your baby
I have come as a gift from heaven's halls in your heart,
Oh hear my call, mother keep me I am your baby,
Oh mother, let me live don't take away my life, Mother let me live.

You know it isn't right to stop me being born, I want to be yours.
Oh mother, let me live, don't take away my life,
Mother let me live, I want to live my life.
Mother you will see when you look at me and you hold me in your arms

You'll fall in love with me

Like a flower in your care, I am a gift so pure and fair.
